Nazi Press Predicts Roosevelt May Be Forced to Abandon "European War Mongers"

SAILING MAY BE "BLIND"

British Would Be Pleased To Have German Ships Within Easy Reach

(By International News Service)

BERLIN—German Admiralty announced 40 warships will sail Tuesday for maneuvers in Spanish waters. Nazi press lashed Anglo-French "encirclement" move, and predicted that President Roosevelt may be forced to abandon "the sinking ship of European war mongers" or "founder in a Jewish-democratic witches' cauldron."

LONDON—British naval experts termed German naval junkie a "delightful gift" to British Navy should war break out. Meanwhile, the way was paved for entry of Turkey into anti-aggression bloc.

ROME—Italy hailed Chamberlain's failure to guarantee Yugoslavia independence.

LONDON, April 14—German naval maneuvers mean either there will be no war until the return of the German squadron after three or four weeks, or the whole thing is a blind to cover a lightning stroke this week-end, before the German ships set forth on Tuesday.

Lansdale Makes Drive Against "All-Night" Parking

LANSDALE, Apr. 14—Once again the Lansdale streets are clear of the all-night parking nuisance, following a renewed drive by the local police.

Dozens of warnings were issued, and Chief Samuel Woffindin reported yesterday that he has received "one hundred per cent co-operation" from the public.

No objections to orders to keep cars off the street have been made, and the only cars in the whole community that are left at the curb all night are those of two borough employees who must be ready for emergency calls at the municipal electric plant at a moment's notice.

Clear streets greatly facilitate the work of the police in patrolling the town in the early hours of the morning. Any motor car found on the street is a signal for investigation by the officers on duty.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

After visiting 17 4-H poultry project members in the lower area of the county, Carl O. Dossin, Pennsylvania State College poultry specialist, held a meeting in the men's jury room in the Court House, at Doylestown, Tuesday evening, when he discussed the rearing of baby chicks and other phases of poultry management.

Assistant County Agent William H. Wilson presided and 35 members from various poultry clubs of the county attended the meeting.

Mr. Dossin, who showed a number of slides relative to the management and raising of poultry, also spoke on diseases and Spring management.

In the afternoon Mr. Dossin, who was accompanied by Assistant County Agent Wilson, visited 17 members of the Newtown and Edgewood 4-H Poultry Clubs.

Mr. Dossin, who inspected the poultry projects of the 4-H club boys and girls, was well pleased with the type of birds the 4-H club members are raising.

He also commented on the fine care given the poultry by the youthful Bucks poultry breeders.

Suggestions for Spring management of the birds were given the individual members by the Pennsylvania State College specialist on his inspection visits.

Six wine glasses, said to have been very old, sold for 37½ cents each at a public sale of household goods and personal property belonging to Mrs. Montana Brombach at her home on the Bristol road, near Warrington, Monday afternoon.

These and many other articles which were offered brought very good prices. The sale, attended by between 250 and 300 persons, many of them from New York and Philadelphia, was in charge of Justice of the Peace Irvin L. MacNair, of near Chalfont, with Abram Clymer, Chalfont, occupying the auction block. Auctioneer Clymer, a veteran in the business, found bidding very brisk and the buyers willing to pay high prices for the hundreds of articles offered for sale during the afternoon.

Eight pieces of majolica, one of them a pitcher resembling an owl, were sold from $1.50 to $5 each. A fish service set, including a large platter and 10 plates, proved to be the attraction of a large number of persons. This set, which was hand-painted china, went to the highest bidder for $15.

Restuming the weekly meetings interrupted by the observance of Good Friday, the Doylestown Forum will meet tonight to discuss the question, "What should the Federal Government do about the aliens in this country?"

Rabbi William H. Fineshruber, of the Kenneth Israel Congregation of Philadelphia, a noted and very popular speaker, will make one of the keynote addresses on the topic of the evening. Dr. Fineshruber is well known in Bucks county through his activity as a director of the National Farm School and his country residence in the Point Pleasant district.

Roosevelt's Appeal

Washington, Apr. 14—President Roosevelt today entered an early appeal to the war-threatened old world to adopt the peaceful policies so successful in the new world, but at the same time he warned that the 21 republics of the Western Hemisphere are prepared to present a united defense against any threat from abroad.

Anticipating that the Americas might be subjected to "attack through economic pressure," the President pledged the United States would throw all of its power into the breach "so that no American nation need surrender any fraction of its sovereign freedom to maintain its economic welfare."

Speaking before the governing board of the Pan American Union with his words broadcast via short wave radio to Central and South America, Mr. Roosevelt considered that old world "dreams of conquest appear to us as ridiculous as they are criminal. He pointed to the long standing peaceful relations of the 21 American nations, and asked of Europe:

"Do you really have to assume that nations can find no better method of realizing their destinies than those which were used by the huns and vandals 1500 years ago?" The American peace which we celebrate today has no quantity of weakness. We are preparing to maintain and to defend it to the fullest extent of our strength matching force to force if any attempt is made to subvert our institutions or to impair the independence of any one of our group.

"Should the method of attack be that of economic pressure, I pledge that my own country will also give economic support, so that no American nation need surrender any fraction of its economic welfare."

The issue," he said, "is really whether our civilization is to be dragged into the tragic vortex of unending militarism. We have the right to say that there shall not be an occurrence of world affairs which permits us any choice but to turn our countries into barracks, unless we are to be vassals of some conquering empire."

Sad Plight of A Leader

Washington, April 13.

NO STRANGER break between a President and his leader has occurred in Senate history than the one between Mr. Roosevelt and Senator Barkley over the relief appropriation fight which resulted in a 49-20 rebuff to the President.

It was another illustration of the curiously abnormal conditions existing in Washington today.

CERTAINLY, unless Senator Barkley is utterly devoid of spirit and incapable of resentment it would seem unlikely that, however surface cordiality may be maintained, the personal relations between him and the President should not be seriously impaired. Because the humiliation to which "Dear Alben" has been subjected was open, definite and deliberate. No one has any doubt about that. While official position and political facts still link them together the feeling will not be the same. In politics or anything else you cannot publicly kick a man in the pants and expect him to love you—particularly when he was loyally doing the best he could in your interests. In effect, that is exactly what happened. The history of the incident can be briefly given.

—O—

SENATOR BARKLEY, whose devotion to the President, and his policies has been complete, found himself faced with a situation in the Senate where to have continued fighting for the $150,000,000 appropriation would have been stupid as well as stubborn. It was made perfectly clear that to have done so would not only have been futile but foolish. It would have risked an even deeper cut than the House had made and certainly

100,000 Pieces of Real Estate Face The Auction Block

NORRISTOWN, Apr. 14—A staggering amount of real estate, at least 100,000 pieces, faces the auction block in Montgomery county this year for non-payment of taxes after a nine-year moratorium.

"We have just started to compile the list and haven't reached the grand total, but some idea of the number is obtained from records showing that 65,000 liens were filed in 1930, 1931 and 1932," Mr. Dettre said.

Insurance Question Discussed By Rotarians

"Getting the Most Out of Your Insurance," was the subject of a talk given by Rotarian John O. Slemmer, superintendent of the local Metropolitan office, when he addressed his fellow members at the regular weekly meeting of the Rotary Club at the Elks' Home here yesterday afternoon.

Slemmer advised that "it is the business of the head of every family to, in addition to his regular vocation, take care of the family by getting the most out of your insurance."

The speaker pointed out that there are different kinds of payments that are made. One of these is the type which provides for a lump sum at the time of the decease of the head of the home. Others include: a large sum at death, followed by monthly payments; all monthly payments; and annuities and retirement funds.

"If the type selected is a monthly income, see that the sum provided is sufficiently large to take care of the family following the decease of the head," Slemmer advised.

Slemmer pointed out that it is well to care for the possibility of simultaneous death of man and wife.

The talk was well received and questions were asked the speaker at the conclusion of his talk.

Lester D. Thorne, president, was in charge of the large attendance. Guests were present from the Morrisville and Doylestown clubs.

Next week the Bristol Rotary Club will be guests to the Boyertown Rotary Club at a dinner in the basement of the Presbyterian Church at 6:30 p. m. Following the dinner the two groups will go to the Bristol Recreation Center where teams from each club will conduct a bowling match.

SALES PSYCHOLOGY

If we were in Boston we should probably patronize the barber who has hung this sign in his shop: "Take a look at our barbers. They are all bald." Unless you want your hair like this, you had better start taking care of it immediately."

Commercial candor has come so far in this last generation that disarming frankness, as here, may be the sole basis of a sales appeal. It was in Boston, also, that a retailer of job lots and bankrupt stocks built a great business on such advertising as "Overcoats—We don't think much of them, but maybe you will. Take them away, for $12 apiece." Many a sale grew out of a reader's conclusion that the goods could hardly be as bad as the advertiser pretended. Most of them were not.

This is no more than an exaggeration of a trend in all merchandising toward the undecorated truth, and the impulse for this has come largely from within. Recognition by all enlightened merchant that candor is the essence of any lasting relation between the seller and the customer has made candor the rule. The bigger the enterprise, the closer its adherence to it.

But the same principle is available to a Boston barber. The bald barber plying the customer with a miraculous hair tonic is a standard figure of futility. This one merely sets himself up as a horrible example of neglect. True, one may not care for the tonic of a barber who can't cure himself, but one would be inclined to trust anyone as frank as this in the several other services of barbering.

THERE OUGHT TO BE A LAW

There Ought to Be a Law. At least, that is what we are told on the slightest provocation. We have been so busy making a new law—federal, state or municipal—every time There Ought to Be a Law, that we have lost track of all the old laws which still linger on the yellowed pages of our dusty law books. But they still are laws, and violation thereof still is a crime or misdemeanor, even though neither citizens nor law-enforcement agencies know that they exist.

For example, if you exhibit a bear in Maine you are a law-breaker. And, if you go to Michigan and incite hostile Indians to violate treaty, you are eligible for the "loose-gow." In New Jersey, you are advised to avoid the punishable offense of insulting "another's honor, delicacy or reputation." In Kansas, you must refrain from publicly eating snakes, lizards or tarantulas—or else.

Certain occupational hazards attach to our state laws. In South Carolina, an aviator must not kill any birds. In Oregon, a hotel-keeper may get a chance to say "Good morning, Judge!" if he provides sheets less than nine feet long. In Alabama it is an offense to sit at a neighbor's cook or butler. And, if a Georgia dentist is guilty of "cruelty or unskillfulness," the patient has a right to call the cops.

Hm-m-m! Smart people, those Georgians!

A Texan says he has found a way to make a gallon of water and a can of lye do the work of 2,000 gallons of gasoline. There will be those to ask if that is the right way to spell a certain word.

"THE DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

CHAPTER XXVI

For Beverly that winter had been endless. She had been dragged from one place to another, as if her father were trying to escape from himself. But he could not leave himself behind.

"I think we'll go on tomorrow."

"Where?"

"Berlin. I've wired the Adlon."

And the next day, in a stuffy overfurnished room at the Adlon she would be unpacking her clothes again, and instead of Monte Carlo or the Nevski Prospekt in Saint Petersburg she would be gazing at Unter den Linden and the Brandenburg Tor. When she was settled, she would go out, holding her big fur muff against her face, for the wind was cold, walking briskly so that she would be weary enough to sleep. Then back again to the long, heavy German dinner, to a silent father, to bad coffee later in the lounge or a liqueur in the small bar.

She had no time to make friends, no lightness and laughter in her life. When one day near the canal she came face to face with Jerry Ames, it was like recapturing her youth; and Jerry, smiling down at her, proceeded to tuck her arm under his and do some capturing of his own.

"What in the world brought you here?"

"Can you ask? I've chased you all over the map and onto the margins! And now that I've found you—"

She was very lovely there in the cold with her hair against her cheek, with her face flushed in the wind and her skirts whipping around her slender legs. He eyed her with appreciation.

"Now that I've found you I'm not letting you go, Bev."

She said nothing to that. He was young and gay and possessive. He took her to tea, came to dinner that evening, got up a dinner party later, and sometime that night she found herself dancing in his arms the long German waltz to a band playing the "Blue Danube." Jerry holding her and whispering in her ear:

"I love you, sweetheart. Love you. Love you."

She went back to bed and to sleep with that ringing in her ears, the music, the soft lights, and Jerry's handsome head towering over her. The next day he sent her a huge bunch of violets, and she pinned them to her black fur coat. She had worn no flowers since Annie's death.

They went to Paris, and he went with them. When Staunton slept in the compartment of the train, Jerry came over and sitting beside her, took her hand.

"You do care for me, don't you, Bev?"

"I don't want to think about love now, Jerry. Not with Mother—"

"I know, sweet. I'll not bother you."

He made Paris possible. She was not in love with him, but she was fond of him. Staunton was seeing his foreign agents, buying pictures and old French furniture, keeping busy to fill a strange emptiness in his life; and Beverly, facing a lonely day, would hear Jerry on the telephone.

"How about dinner and a dance?"

"I was going to bed early."

"Time for that when we're old, my child. Come on; put on something pretty and let's go somewhere."

Then one night in a taxicab he slipped something on her engagement finger and, leaning over, kissed it gently. She looked down at his bright head and, when he straightened up, into his blue eyes.

"Do you mind?" he asked, smiling.

"I don't know. Give me time, Jerry, won't you? I feel so lost."

Beverly's father seemed pleased when she told him she was engaged to Jerry; or as pleased as he could be just then, with the order of his life altered without his consent. And at his suggestion she began to select her trousseau, going from shop to shop with a small worried frown, determinedly putting away that young past of hers, her youth, her mother, and of course Chris Arden. That sense of practicality she had inherited from her father told her that Jerry fitted into her scheme of life, whereas Chris never had and never would; and she was fond of Jerry. In time, she thought, she would probably love him. And he was cheerful, cheerful and rather demanding. She would come into the hotel from a long day to find him, smiling and fresh.

"How about dinner and dancing?"

"Do we have to, Jerry? I'm so tired."

"Change of occupation is rest, my love! Hurry now, get a hot bath, and you'll be ready to go."

One night she said to him, "We can't dance through life, Jerry."

"Who wants to! But we're only young once, and it's spring, my sweet."

It was that spring in Paris that Jerry got a letter from America. He read it twice and then carefully destroyed it, and after that he took a drink to steady his nerves, and then another. Beverly waited for him until late in the evening, and then went to bed. He turned up the next morning with a cut lip and a story of a taxi crash, however, and she believed him. She had to believe him. He was all she had.

That was in Paris. In America, too, spring had come; and in the hospital the spring and new hope had put a little dance into Katie's step, and a trifle of coquetry when an interne idled into her ward. It went no further than that, however, for Katie was watching her step. She was competent and willing, but she was too self-contained, a trifle hard; and to the other nurses she was merely a compact, efficient little machine, doing her work but no more.

She seldom saw Chris. He was busy again; his practice growing, spreading beyond the block into the ward and from there slowly extending. On her afternoons at home he would come in, eat hurriedly, and go out again, closing the door into the back office with firm finality. Sometimes she did not see him at all, and the house without him meant nothing to her. It seemed untidier than ever, and after a visit home she would go back to the hospital, grateful to it for its order and quiet.

Chris was mentally wretched and physically highly uncomfortable, for Lily had lapsed even from her previous state of inefficiency. Her wrappings were more bedraggled, the accumulation of unwashed dishes and dust everywhere greater. There were times, too, when she acted like a woman drugged, although she angrily denied it.

"Drugs? What sort of drugs, and where would I get them?"

He took to locking his medicine closet then, but Lily knew a trick worth two of that. There were always the samples left in Chris's absence, and one day she got in a locksmith and had a second key made to the closet.

Now and then Chris brought in a colored woman from the alley behind the house to clean up, and for a day or two the brass plate on the front door would shine and the house be orderly. But soon it would lapse again, with Lily shut away in her upstairs room, rocking slowly in her comfortable daze.

One day Chris saw the Lewis car on a downtown street and knew that Beverly was back from Europe. It made no appreciable difference in him, save that he began then to develop those deep lines from nose to mouth which were so characteristic of his later. But very soon after that he had one of those experiences that set many a medical man to wondering just where right and justice lie, and which caused him many a sleepless night for weeks to come.

He walked into his office one night to find a young woman waiting for him. She had an intelligent face and was well dressed, and he had no suspicion of the situation when she followed him into the consulting room. Her first words enlightened him.

"I am in trouble, Doctor. I suppose you know what that means."

And I imagine you will refuse to do anything about it." She smiled gravely. "I know, because I've tried before. There's a law against it, isn't there?"

"It's rather more than merely a law, isn't it?"

She nodded. "Much more. I know all the arguments. I've had several months to think them over. Alone, she added with a slight emphasis.

"Then the father of the child—?"

"Has been away. He didn't know about it, you see. Not that that would have made any difference. I thought once he would marry me eventually, but—well, that doesn't matter now. I think now that I will have the child, Doctor." She smiled again. "I'm not being particularly noble, but you see, I happened to care for the man."

She was so carefully matter-of-fact that he kept his own face impassive. "You are being very brave now. It's the best thing, of course; the only sensible thing."

She had not finished, however. She was still calm, but he saw that her hands were clenched tight or the arms of her chair.

"What I want

3, but this probably will be increased to $5,000 at the peak of the maintenance campaign.

"The tripling of the number of employees last year wasted millions of dollars," accused Hughes. "During our administration men will be employed when required to perform the necessary work of the department and never to benefit specifically any political party or group of politicians.

"By eliminating every unnecessary expenditure and cutting expenses wherever possible we are continuing to finance our WPA requirements and are keeping this vast army of men employed.

"We are now forced to reduce the amount of money normally available for Spring maintenance operations. During the present fiscal year approximately $6,000,000 will be spent for repair and operation of department equipment and $8,000,000 for rental of equipment from outside parties.

"The most flagrant example of waste and extravagance is in Luzerne County where public funds were dissipated in such a corrupt and dishonest manner that the Dauphin County Grand jury has indicted a former secretary of highways (Roy K. Brownmiller) and the Luzerne County grand jury also has indicted this gentleman and many more persons."

plants and fertilizer in each instance, offering the prize for the one with the largest percentage of production and best quality.

Upon Mrs. Woerner's property, Maurer placed 300 tomato plants. From these were picked 115 baskets, or over two tons of tomatoes.

The luscious red fruit of the patch was for Mrs. Woerner to do with as she pleased, and she sold the tomatoes to the basket.

"Arthur Dorrance, president of the Campbell Soup Company, paid his fourth visit to my place last season, when these tomatoes were ripe," stated

Mrs. Woerner, "and he picked 15 baskets just for the fun of it."

The stands or trellises measure nearly five feet in height, and can be left in the fields year after year. Maurer claims that use of such not only produces greater quantities but finer quality tomatoes. In the coming season he will place 600 tomato plants on the Woerner farm, using a stand for each plant. In addition, Mrs. Woerner plans to grow tomatoes for the Campbell Company on an adjoining tract.

Madera as resident engineer-inspector. The architect was R. B. Okie, of Philadelphia.

The Manor House is a three-story brick and frame structure containing 13 rooms. The main structure measures 39 feet 10 inches by 61 feet 2 inches, and has an extension for the kitchen which brings the length of the building to 97 feet and two inches. It is the most imposing building on the tract and is made of hand-made brick and hand-made lath. The fire-places are of the original tiles which were found in excavations made at the site. Part of the original foundations were found intact during the excavations and were left standing so that they may be viewed by visitors. Wooden pins were used generally throughout the structure in fastening together the timbers, such as was done in the original Manor House.

The Bake and Brew House is a two-story structure of frame and contains bake ovens. The structure measures 42 feet, three inches by 66 feet. The Brew House has all of the equipment of a miniature brew house.

The Barn is built of field stone and is 25 feet by 70 feet and 10 inches. It is of pre-colonial architecture and in the opinion of architects is a very fine piece of work.

The Ice House, Smoke House and Outhouse are of brick and are the minor structures in the group.

hopes to eliminate one of the most curious moves of the European super-powers.

Nothing would please the British Navy more than to have the proposed German expedition of 40 warships within reach when the war began.

British Navy superiority over the German Navy would combine British and French superiority over the combined German and Italian navies, which is so immense that there is no question that the immediate result of any conflict would be an initial route for the Germans and Italians followed by their naval extinction.

The Great Game of Politics

would have widened the Democratic division and increased bitterness. Under the circumstances, Mr. Barkley did the sensible thing, entered into a compromise agreement, which would have saved the President from another open defeat and avoided much bad feeling.

THE President was at Warm Springs, and it was a case in which a man had to use his judgment. What Mr. Barkley did was what he thought the President would have wanted him to do and certainly what seemed the only feasible thing to do. Immediately there was a revolt of the little group of New Deal extremists, led by Senator Claude Pepper, of Florida, nominated last year by a combination of WPA and Townsend votes. Threatening a filibuster, these New Deal Senators staved off the vote until Mr. Roosevelt got home. Pressed by the Workers Alliance and appealed to by the Peppers, Mintons and Schwelmbachs, the President then repudiated his own leader, the faithful Barkley, and in a formal and entirely unnecessary letter to Mr. Pepper praised that ebullient individual and indorsed his stand.

THAT the use of this letter, when the telephone would have been quicker, was aimed squarely at Mr. Barkley was too clear to dispute. No one construed it in any other way either before the vote or after. It had the effect of saying that Senator Barkley was no longer to be trusted and that the real Roosevelt men are in the Pepper group. It was a peculiarly ungracious thing to do to a man whom he had himself chosen as leader and whom he must have known was doing the best he could to promote his interests. It gave color to the mean little charge that the agreement by which Mr. Barkley tried to avoid a hopeless fight and a sure rebuff to the President was a "betrayal of the New Deal."

AS things stand, Mr. Barkley is left in a most peculiar and painful position. Himself an avowed New Dealer, naturally he has not been able to command support from the anti-New Deal Democrats. Now he finds a group of some fifteen of the extreme Left-Wing New Dealers—much closer to the President than he and supported by him—who refuse to follow the Barkley leadership and brand him as a deserter. That leaves no one for him to lead except himself. Though at best Senator Barkley is not a brilliant man and as a leader would never be regarded as great, nevertheless one cannot help feeling sorry for him. He is in an almost unprecedented plight. As for the President, few will dispute that however lacking in quality was the Barkley leadership, when he changes it for Pepper leadership, he does not raise the level nor improve the tone—quite the contrary.

PHILADELPHIA—(INS)—Use of the autogiro type of aircraft to shuttle airmail from thickly populated urban areas to large transport planes at suburban airports may be tried shortly here, according to postal officials. The autogiro would operate from the roof of the Philadelphia post office on a schedule of five trips a day.

Zanuck's production, "Jesse James," the 20th Century-Fox epic of the world's most colorful outlaw, in which Henry Fonda and Randolph Scott are also being starred, and which opens today at the Ritz Theatre.

That's the success story of Nancy Kelly, the lovely 17-year-old screen discovery of "star-maker" Darryl F. Zanuck.

BRISTOL

For an hour's thoroughly engrossing relaxation we can recommend nothing better than the current offering at the Bristol Theatre, Republic's "The Mysterious Miss X," which opens today for a two-day run with Mary Hart and Michael Whalen in the starring roles.

Miss Hart proves to be a fascinating as well as "mysterious" heroine, and does exceptionally well in a splendid role. She succeeds admirably in projecting her personality onto the screen and coloring her role with an individuality which is most welcome to a jaded film goer.

GRAND

Latest outdoor drama of the pioneer West, "Let Freedom Ring," which opened yesterday at the Grand Theatre, presents Nelson Eddy in his most virile characterization to date, surrounding him with a cast of veterans who, despite their formidable reputations, are hard put to it to match the sterling work of the singing star.

In his singing, his acting and his climatic fist-fight with Victor McLaglen, Eddy sets a new high standard for himself, the role of the young Harvard law graduate of the 1860's who must resort to trickery to win a battle against unscrupulous railroad interests being not only made to measure for his talents but offering him a scope hitherto untouched.

Bell Telephone Operator

There are 4,981 Bell telephone operators in Pennsylvania. . . Who are they? What do they look like? What do they wear? Where do they live? How do they like their jobs and what of their future? . . . We thought you'd like to know these operators who serve you and your family. So we've asked a few hundred of them to tell us all about themselves. From their answers, we've developed a picture of an average American young woman—your telephone operator.

SHE DRESSES SMARTLY . . .

She's 5 feet, 3½ inches tall, weighs 120 lbs., has brown hair, blue eyes. She shops carefully for her clothes, loves to find a bargain. She has one or two good dinner dresses, wears smart, inexpensive, conservative things for work. Most common first name is Mary; most common last name, Smith. So we'll call her Mary Smith.

SHE LIKES HER JOB . . .

Mary Smith has been an operator for about 12 years. She spent two months in training before starting to handle your calls. She says: "I'd rather be an operator than anything else in the world—except a certain man's wife."

COOL-HEADED, WARM-HEARTED . . .

She has a "voice with a smile". Always courteous and helpful, she is alert and efficient in her work, proud of her record for speed and accuracy. She has handled many emergency calls with good judgment and sympathetic understanding.

SPENDS WISELY . . . SAVES . . .

Mary Smith lives with her parents, helps to support the home. If her other obligations permit, she sets aside something each week for savings and insurance through the Company's payroll deduction thrift plan. (One of every four operators owns a few shares of Bell Telephone stock.) She likes novels by Kathleen Norris; enjoys Charlie McCarthy and Bing Crosby best of the radio programs.

LIKES SPORTS, GOOD TIMES . . .

Mary enjoys good health, swims, dances, plays a fair game of tennis, likes football. Her favorite actor is Spencer Tracy; favorite actress, Jeanette MacDonald. Her vacation is spent at the nearest beach or mountain resort. One summer she took a short cruise and she hopes to go again—on her honeymoon.

SHE'LL MARRY SOME DAY . . .

Chances are that she'll leave the Company some day to take that honeymoon trip . . . but she may become a Supervisor or even a Chief Operator. If she stays with the Company, she will eventually retire under the Bell Pension Plan, established in 1913 for Bell employees.

AND THERE YOU HAVE A PICTURE of the average telephone operator . . . a pleasant, happy individual, a good citizen, a friendly neighbor. Thousands of these Mary Smiths sit at Bell switchboards throughout the State . . . ready to help you talk to anyone, anywhere, any time. They have helped to give this country the world's finest telephone service.

FALLSINGTON HIGH IS IN GREAT NEED OF PITCHERS THIS YEAR

Coach Di Risi Lost His Three Ace Flingers at End of Last Season

THREE FIELDERS GONE

Castro and Jadlocki To Take Care of The Catching Assignment

The same situation which prevails at many other Lower Bucks County schools this year regarding the diamond team's prospects for the coming campaign is the same at Fallsington High.

In a word they need—pitching. Coach Mike DeRisi has lost everyone of his three ace flingers which tossed them up last season. He must develop at least one twirler, who can stay in the game for at least four or five innings. If one or two of his prospects come through beyond expectations, Mike feels his club will stand an even chance with the rest of the league to cart off the title. But that is a big IF. In fact, it appears to be too big a problem for the Falcons to handle this year.

The loss of Walt Anderson, little southpaw, who was the ace of the staff last year, was the blow that put the crimps on coach DeRisi's mound corps. What's more he also lost the services of his other two twirlers, Charlie Anderson and Vic Roberts. The former graduated and the latter failed to report this year.

Three others who departed from the school last June included an infielder and two outfielders. Miles McCue was the infielder, who was used as a utility man, while Stanley Vandegrift and Les Appenzeller were the outfielders. Anderson performed in the outer gardens too when not on the hill, while Jones was a third baseman when not hurling.

The outfield situation has been taken care of by newcomers and holdovers. The same is true of the spot left open at third. But the pitching is a problem that is puzzling.

Jim Castro, a veteran, and John Jadlocki will take care of the catching assignment this season with either Paul Sterling or Bud Appenzeller taking over the initial sack. Appenzeller was a member of the '38 combination, but Sterling is a newcomer. He is a big Freshman, who can hit, but is not a steady fielder. If he comes through in that phase of the game, he will definitely be the regular first sacker.

Another newcomer, Mike Oser, seems to have the inside track for the job handling grounders around the keystone sack over Rocco DiRosa, a substitute from the '38 team. George Chewning, who held down that post last year, will probably be shifted to the outfield. Two more newcomers will take care of the left side of the infield with Albert Foster covering the shortfield vacated by Vic Roberts, and Stan Felkner taking over the hot corner spot. Thus Coach DeRisi will have an entire new inner cordon if he uses Sterling at first.

The outfield is also well rounded out with George Lovett, a regular last year; Harry Lake, a substitute on the '38 team; and George Chewning, a regular, who was moved out from second base. Besides these, he has Bill Batten, Bratt Snipes, Warren Baker, and Ike Robbins to fill in when necessary along with several others who can fill these berths if necessary.

Tom Purcell, a little southpaw; and Walt Ellis, a Freshman, are the two hurlers the Falcons have on hand although there is a good possibility, coach DeRisi may insert both Stan Felkner and George Chewning in the box if these fail to come through.

The Falcons will have a good hitting team if nothing else coach DeRisi stated.

As far as their defense is concerned, it is pretty fair but should improve with time to take care of itself. Due to bad weather and the wet field, the club hasn't had very many practices thus far. However, in the drills they have had, DeRisi said that the entire quartet of newcomers who will make up the inner defense, looked very good and should even be better than last year's infield. They are all good hitters too, he said.

Plans are almost completed for the forthcoming season of the Bristol Twilight League. At a meeting of the circuit held in the St. Ann's Athletic Association club house last night it was decided to open the season, May 15th.

The Diamond Sporting Goods Company, Andalusia, entered a team in the league. This club will be managed by Joe Diamanti and according to present arrangements will play its home games on Michael's field. Diamanti will pick his players from Andalusia and Cornwells.

The hall adopted for the season was the Draper and Maynard ball. This marked the first time that the Bristol League did not adopt the Reach 6 ball. Joe Diamanti announced that he will donate a large trophy to the league at the close of the season.

It was decided to hold the next meeting Tuesday night. At that time, applications for entry into the league will close. It will either be a six or eight team league. Teams and their representatives last night were:

Bohm & Haas, Andy Pfaffenrath and Herman Schmidt; Andalusia, Joe Diamanti; Odd Fellows, Robert Sutton; Hall Aluminum Aircraft, William McCall, William White and Edward Nellis; Grundys, Anthony DiFanna.

Suburban Ball League To Open Season May 23rd

The newly-formed Bristol Suburban League will open its schedule on May 23. Each team will have 25 league games. The schedule runs straight through with no halves and then the O'Shaughnessy play-off system will be put into effect.

The by-laws were drawn up and adopted and a schedule is being drawn up. Games will be played on Tuesday and Friday evenings. Another team is needed. If any team is interested send two representatives to the next meeting, April 25th, at 7.30, at 342 Monroe street, Bristol.
